

Worn Women

Women, worn and tired from overwork, need a tonic. That feeling of weakness or helplessness will not leave you of itself. You should take Wine of Cardui, that effectual remedy for the ailments and weaknesses of women. Thousands of women have tried Cardui and write enthusiastically of the great benefit it has been to them. Try it—don't experiment—use this reliable, oft-tried medicine.

TAKE CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

Mrs. Rena Hare, of Pierce, Fla., tried Cardui and afterward wrote: "I was a sufferer from all sorts of female trouble, had pain in my side and legs, could not sleep, had shortness of breath. I suffered for years, until my husband insisted on my trying Cardui. The first bottle gave me relief and now I am almost well. Try Cardui. 'Twill help you."

The meeting of the last Legislature will go down in history bearing the noblest record ever made and what is that record, nothing but a lot of bills and them vetoed. The pension bill, the most important of all, was vetoed by the Governor(?) which was for the benefit of the Confederate soldiers, who fought for the lost cause. They will have to wait until the next Legislature.

A Slick One.

Three Louisville men who away back when Louisville was but half her present commercial importance, were members of her police force, happened to gather around a little marble-top table in a certain cafe the other day. Naturally the conversation was in a reminiscent vein, and each recounted some experience when he wore the buttons.

One of them, the oldest of the trio, and who was known as a terror to evil-doers in his days, listened respectfully to several tales. At last he said:

"Gentlemen, I'm going to tell a joke that is on me, and it will be the first time it ever passed my lips. It was twenty-two years ago, or thereabouts. I was doing a beat out South of Broadway, in the residence district. It was about midnight, and I was sauntering along the street, at peace with both the beat and the world. I saw a man turn into my block on the opposite side of the street. There was nothing wrong about a man on the street at that hour, so I paid little attention to him until he saluted me with 'Hollo, Cap.' I spoke to him and he passed on until he reached a house in the middle of the block. I had been on the beat but a few days, and did not know who occupied the residence in question. I glanced back and saw the fellow go into the yard.

"Walking to the corner. I paused a moment; then I heard a window sash slide up. The noise came from the very house I had seen the man approach. Well, I went back hurriedly and saw the fellow's feet disappearing through a front window. I went in and called to him. He came back to the window and said: 'That's all right, Cap—I live here, but found when I got home that I had no latch key, and the family is away.' We laughed at the situation and I went on my way.

"Well, next day the family returned, and by noon the police had a report that the place had been robbed and rifled of $2,000 worth of silverware and jewelry. The only man of the house was

Bashful Man's Mistake.

A quiet, bashful sort of a young fellow was making a call on a Capitol Hill girl one evening not so very long ago, when her father came into the parlor with his watch in his hand. It was about 9:30 o'clock. At the moment the young man was standing on a chair straightening a picture over the piano. The girl had asked him to fix it. As he turned the old gentleman, a gruff, stout fellow, said:

"Young man, do you know what time it is?"

The bashful young man got off the chair nervously, "Yes, sir," he replied. "I was just going."

He went into the hall without any delay and took his hat and coat. The girl's father followed him. As the caller reached for the doorknob, the old gentleman again asked him if he knew what time it was.

"Yes, sir," was the youth's reply. "Good night!" And he left without waiting to put his coat on.

After the door had closed the old gentleman turned to the girl. "What's the matter with the fellow?" he asked. "My watch ran down this afternoon and I wanted him to tell me the time so that I could see it."—Denver Post.
